SCSC Endorses New Wheelchair Levy - Will Double The Money They Manage

by Jason Pasquale
Editor-in-Chief

Scarborough students may be forced to pay an additional $30 in levies next year.

Last Tuesday the Scarborough Campus Students' Council voted to place a referendum question on the upcoming spring ballot. If the referendum passes, it will add $30 to the fees paid by every full-time undergraduate at Scarborough College for the next two years.

The referendum is designed to raise money to pay the rest of the money required to pay for a variety of projects on the Scarborough College which will make it more wheelchair accessible.

This was the final year of the Students' Administrative Council's three year wheelchair access levy. Over the three years approximately $320,000 (before opt-outs) was raised from Scarborough students. The SAC Wheelchair Accessibility Committee has alloted $332,625 (an additional $12,625) for the Scarborough College renovations.

The SAC levy had an opt-out clause, which meant that any student who requested a refund would be given their $30 back. SCSC is currently looking into the legality of having a referendum without an opt-out clause.

When motioning for the levy, SCSC President Lance Flash claimed that it was required or the $332,625 will be reallocated to other areas of the University. Flash cites the source of this information as a private meeting between Acting Principal John Perz, SAC Vice-President Ferdinando Longo, and himself. Longo and SAC President Farrah Jinha, however, claim that this is inaccurate. Jinha commenting, "No. It's a big lie and it just goes to prove how little he [Flash] knows."

SAC maintains that the money allocated to Scarborough will remain, it will simply sit until the additional funding is raised either by SCSC or the Scarborough Administration.

SAC/WAC's proposal for Scarborough Caollege includes a new elevator in the R-Wing near the Attic and a variety of automatic door openers in the main entrances and washrooms.

An additional proposal has since been added -- a chair lift to the SCSC offices at an estimated cost of $45,000. According to Longo, "The WAC stated that we would in no shape or form sponsor a chairlift to the SCSC office... The priorities were the buildings of higher learning."

The Real "Campus Connection"

by Hans Cespedes Wittig
Underground Staff

The Scarborough Campus Students' Council appears to have been violating their own by-laws in order to provide paid positions for their friends.

The positions of SCSC Banner Manager, Services Manager, and Photographer all went to people who had a prior personal relationship with members of SCSC. An SCSC computer contract similarly was given to someone with personal ties to SCSC.

It is unlikely that this is coincidence, as no other applicants were interviewed for the positions.

SCSC bylaws explicitly state that employee positions are to be advertised throughout the school. All applicants are then to be interviewed by a Standing Committee and then are to be hired by the entire SCSC board based on the Standing Committee's recommendations. It appears that this committee was never formed.

The Standing Committee's composition is outlined under section 10.10 (reproduced below) and, according to V.P. Finance Andrew McDonald, the V.P. Administration Pat Leo, "is responsible for calling the meetings and informing the members who the applicants for each job are and for what commissions."

This procedure was not followed when Fiorella Sabadin hired a banner manager for her Communications Commission. Sabadin admits to knowing the man she hired before he applied but emphasises that, "They [a hiring committee] told me who they preferred and I told them who I preferred and we came to an agreement." McDonald, who is responsible as V.P. Finance for salaries of employees, counters, "that the hiring Board at no time met for the hiring of Alistair Giffin as Banner Manager." There were three other applicants for the position.

McDonald's fellow VP Leo, however, agrees with Sabadin, stating, "we [the Standing Committee on Hiring] interviewed I'd say, I believe it was three people." In personal interviews with those eligible to sit on the seven member committee, six stated that they had not taken part.

Part-Time Commissioner Evan Anderson hired two employees on his own authority, bypassing the Standing Committee. He stated that the committee is "non-existent" because of the wording of the bylaws, referring to the positions as "elect." If Anderson is correct and the Hiring Committee only exists before the new council takes control of their positions then all hiring must be done by that time.

The SCSC also hired a photographer twice without either advertising the position to the students or forming a standing committee. SCSC President Lance Flash admits "to knowing the photographer in question before he came to his office, Flash attributes the lack of advertising to the fact that "a photographer is not a student position." Last year, however, SCSC hired another friend of Flash's as the photographer for Mosaic II. SCSC offered nothing but compliments for this student's work.

SCSC first hired an outside photographer to take shots of Orientation '92-'93, and has now been hired to cover this year's Mosaic III. Caroline Jebanathirajah, SCSC Cultural Commissioner is in charge of Mosaic III. Since this is not a permanent position she stated that she, "does not have to justify the absence of advertising." Other SCSC members disagree.

Anderson describes the situation as "unfortunate" and stated that "a student should be given a fair shot at every job at student council."

Second Year Representative Nicolle Russell and Scarborough SAC representative Sean LeBer agreed that the positions should first be offered to the students. McDonald refused to comment and Leo wanted to consult with the SCSC lawyer before commenting further.

Leo also represents a possible conflict of interest in the SCSC computer purchases. SCSC purchased an updated computer for $4200 at the beginning of the year. The purchase was made through Leo's girlfriend's sister's boyfriend. Flash commented, "some people may considerate it to be a conflict of interest because my friend is gaining money and I may gain some indirect benefits like, I don't know, he'll take me out for lunch or whatever."

LeBer, Jebanathirajah, and Anderson all felt that Leo's relationship on the computer purchase "should have been disclosed." Anderson continued, "when people in an organisation are not honest to each other about what's going on, it just drags everyone down."

Russell summed up the situation with, "contacts are everything."

10.10 The Standing Committee on Hiring

a) The membership of the Committee shall be composed of:
i) the outgoing President;
ii) the Vice-President of Administration elect;
iii) the Vice-President Finance elect;
v) one SAC representative (appointed by the President elect and Vice Presidentt elect);
vi) two Year Representatives (appointed by the President elect and Vice-President elect).

b) The Standing Commitee on Hiring shall recommend to the Board individuals to be hired by the Board for the following positions:

1. Radio Station Manager;
2. The Speaker;
3. Pinball Manager;
4. Duplicating manager;
5. Computer Room Manager;
6. Banner Manager;
7. Spirit and Recruitment Officer;
8. Any other positions that may arise during the year which the Board may authorize.

Scarborough Super Fuel from SCSC

SCSC is considering sponsoring a new fuel company. Allegedly the new fuel is all natural, more efficient, burns clean, is good for your engine and will cost about 10 cents less per litre. SCSC will get about one-third of the price of the adjoining savings card. The card will cost about $37 and, among other savings, is good for a round-trip flight to Florida.

Undergrads Pay Up AND Get Out!!

UofT Dean Robert Pritchard announced at the Canadian Club's last gathering his intent to "reduce the number of undergraduate students to make more resources available for grad programs." At the same function, Peter George, President of the Council of Ontario Universities, referred to Universities as the, "last great bargains."

SCSC Shouts!!! ..but doesn't know the chant

SCSC joined the ranks of College Councils lately last Tuesday in calling on SAC for a referendum on UofT's membership in OUSA.

SCSC President Lance Flash did not know what the acronym stood for when he introduced the vote, for the record it is short for Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance.

SAC Listens to College Councils

On Thursday, January 28, the SAC Executive Committee moved to recommend that the SAC Board of Directors conduct a referendum on UofT's membership in OUSA no later than the fall of 1993 SAC By-Elections.

SAC Clubs Officer Shinan Govari moved a number of amendments because, "the resolution was too vague and too unclear and there wasn't a specific timeline." Govari's amendments established a timeline for external consultations, wide consultations with the College Councils and Organisations and student forums.

Indemnity Granted by SCSP

Touchdowns and Fumbles All 'Round

SuperBowl Sunday worked its annual magic in entrancing millions into staring into the boob-tube last weekend. The international audience was transfixed by the sight of two teams battling for the honour of being number one (OK, so it wasn't such a battle).

At one point in time football was considered an unsafe and barbaric sport, much like wrestling before everyone got the acting lessons (NOTE: Hogan, ask for a refund).

But football's hide was saved from the wave of political correctness by the gentile tide of teamwork. Yes, a team effort is what it is all about (even if only one player goes to Disneyland). A group of men executing a series of well planned maneouvers, striving for a common goal. So damn Boy-Scoutish it can make you regret that last footlong, eh?

But seriously, those who know the game attribute a success to a team following a good lead. The lead, of course, can be a problem - and this is where we should really begin to look at our own lives.

Few would question the need to work together - working at crosspurposes simply is not productive. but what should you do when you know the call is wrong?

Too often in today's world no one wants to risk speaking up. Performing in front of a crowd is perceived as fine as long as you are not seen as the one who is carrying the ball. But the reality is that defence, as important as it is, only goes so far.

We have to remember that it is OK to intercept and then go for all we are worth - that's what the game is really all about.

The quarterback, afterall, can fumble.

Grossed-out by Graffiti

The other morning I went to the library in search of a quiet place to catch up on some readings. After settling in comfortably, my attention was drawn to the ever-present desk graffiti. One particular drawing and caption offended me so deeply in its violent and derogatory treatment of women that I cannot get the image out of my mind. So I write this in the hopes of raising awareness, if only a little, if only for a few.

I am increasingly offended by the nature of the graffiti that I run into all over the college. This is far from the first time that I have settled in and then proceeded to seek an alternative location in which to study so as to avoid further exposure to the offensive material. I can only hope that the exceedingly racist and sexist attitudes exposed in this anonymous commentary come from a small minority of my generation.

So I filed a complaint and the cleaning staff will do their best to scrub up the offending desk. Yet the problem remains, and no doubt I will run into it again. Graffiti will always be found on school desks, this I acknowledge, but it is a certain type of graffiti that needs to be discarded. The problem stems from what? Ignorance? Hatred? These feed off of each other. What is clear is that there are a number of students out there with a shocking lack of respect for themselves and others, who feel a need to spread these racially and sexually degrading messages.

I do not choose to purchase pornography or hate literature. I should not have to be exposed to other people's twisted views of humanity in a public space. Sure, I can always move, but I do so only once offense has already been taken. And besides that, I am tired of fleeing from these attitudes—Please think twice before you indulge, please be aware. Though your drawings and insults are not necessarily directed at me personally, I am nonetheless personally affronted and consider it to be a none too subtle form of sexual harassment.

MISTER Max Responds

Dear editor, I wish to respond to a letter published Jan. 12th concerning "Personhood". The main views were threefold, as I understand them: 1) Feminism, perceiving the status of women to be different from that of men, argues only for the abolition of violence against women, instead of fighting to end all violence. 2) Public pressure and lobbying of governments is useless, and; 3) The only perpetrators of violence against women are evil, immoral "sick individuals" who choose their immorality and also act in a way completely unsanctioned by society. While these views are fairly common, I believe that they are based on misunderstandings and misperceptions.

Feminism definitely perceives women as "special". Women exist in a world where they are equally present and equally capable, yet continue to be discriminated against in almost every domain. It is argued that women's security is much more tenuous than that of a man's. In other words, as a man walking down the street, I may fear violence in the form of physical assault or theft. While the same is true of a woman, many of my female friends also fear sexual assault and sexual harassment...equal people, unequal threats. Feminists fight to eliminated these threats. In doing so, they are pursuing directly and indirectly the elimination of all violence. The ideal is not a world safe for women, but a world safe for everyone.

While public education and political lobbies are agonisingly slow, they have effected our actions, and continue to do so. Every time parliament passes a new law about violence against women, it does so as a result of public pressure. This includes letters sent to MP's, which are often presented in Parliament as evidence of these public desires.

Thus, it comes down to the perpetrators. If all acts of violence against women, (rape, sexism, objectification, assault, etc.), are committed by "sicko's", then we must live in an insane asylum. Most acts of violence against women are done by men who they know and live, work or socialize with. These people aren't thieves, murderers or psychopaths. They are everyday men who are concerned with the acceptability of their actions. Unfortunately, society doesn't view the concerns of women as equally valid or important as it does the concerns of men. Hence, various forms of oppressing women are still considered "acceptable" in that "larger continuum".

Signed, Kerry D. Max

Personhood: Pornography's Dehumanization of...Men!

by Kerry D. Max
Underground Staff

"Pornography institutionalizes the sexuality that both embodies and enacts male supremacy."[1]

I'm not going to discuss how pornography constitutes violence towards women, there's ample evidence of that out there and others better suited to argue the point. What is presented here is how porn (i.e. Playboy, Penthouse, Velvet, etc.), constitutes violence towards men.

A close friend discussed what happens to him when he uses porn. His experience is not unique. When he leafs through a magazine, he reads of the exploits of massively endowed, unendingly potent men; he witnesses the "ecstasy" of beautiful, flawless women who have "voluntarily shared" their sexuality with him and other men; he laughs at the cartoons which all demean women in one way or another. Harmless fun, eh? However, at some point, he must walk through university corridors, sit beside classmates and play the game outside of the pages. While all this happens, those magazines sit in the back of his mind. The women he sees aren't airbrushed and don't like being stared at. He himself doesn't have bulging muscles or four cheerleaders at home to "service" his every desire. In fact, his life is far from glossy and manageable. But that's the world he's left behind, underneath the mattress, and he's looking forward to returning to its dominion.

Pornography is not simply a tool for masturbation. "A man wishes to believe there is a beautiful body with no soul attached. Because of this wish he takes the surface for truth."[2] It is an entire framework of belief and perception. Men receive messages about both genders which have no bearing on reality. "Pornography contains an implied image of men...Men are told to reassert their mastery over women."[3] Sexuality in porn is emotionless, involving a leader and a follower and its obvious who's who in this hierarchy...no partnership, no caring, no misunderstandings or tears or heartbreak. There are those who claim that porn users know it's fantasy, not reality, yet those same people should examine their own fantasies and see where porn has influenced their "ideal" partner, relationship or world. When a guy goes from Playboy to a real partner, he's in for a mega shock and as unprepared as he can be for the emotions which come into play. Pornography offers a safe haven for him to return to. "By providing substitute gratification, it provides an excuse for men to avoid relating to women as people."[1]

It's a challenging world out there and we all need to develop skills for interacting with others as we face reality. Pornography warps the user's view of men, women and the world around him. Ultimately, it's cold and lonely for the thousands of men who, unable to relate to real people, spend their time in the arms of porn's playmates, while their hearts and souls remain empty. Hoping, however, that your's are full, I'll sign off till next week.

Dr. Underground: Read this and call me in the morning.

by Ari Robicsek
Underground Staff

It is 1:44 AM. I have a runny nose. A sporadic cough. A slight weeze. An agonizing persistent hiccup. A slight limp. A mild tic which is causing me to press the number 4 on the keyboard every few seconds. And I feel a little like I've been tossed from a burning airplane into a quaint but eerie Guatemalan village whose kind inhabitants (with very mild cannibalistic tendencies) feed their visitors from the holy ipecac root while clubbing then in the head with wicker products and chanting Barry Manilow tunes.

No, I'm not feeling well. In fact, common sense would suggest that I go to sleep and give up the ambrosial euphoria that is writing a Dr. Underground article at two in the morning while semi-nude homicidal Guatemalans from the seventies dance in my head. Oh, but how could I deprive my faithful readers of a medical tip this week? How could they go on with their lives without an informative peek at the ins and outs of having gonnhorea, the intricacies of constipation, or the riveting life cycle of the anal wart? How could I leave them tipless this week?

I couldn't. And so, I decided to discuss a topic which lends itself to staring at a computer screen at 1:56 in the morning: Tension Headaches.

The tension headache is characterized by a sensation of tightness around the head, at the back of the neck, and even extending to the shoulders. The most common cause of this sort of headache is accumulated stress (E.g., I have to write an article for tomorrow and its already 2:04 in the morning and I haven't started studying for my calculus exam and an annoying tic is making me press the number 4 every few seconds.)

Problems of posture, eyestrain, excessive noise, odours and weather changes an also bring this about.

To grossly oversimplify the situation, in all of these cases, a tensing of the muscles causes their blood supply to be cut off, thereby bringing on considerable pain, possibly nausea, and sometimes vomiting.

Other types of headaches include exertional headaches, which can be caused by severe coughing or physical exertion, cluster headaches, in which the pain is recurring, and localized behind one eye. As well, there are migraine headaches which are severe, and, like pregnancy and a number of other painful experiences, are considerably more common in women than in men.) Also, "Ice cream" headaches (no kidding!) can be caused when something very cold comes in contact with the back of the mouth.

There are a number of treatment options for these problems. First of all, many types of headaches can be prevented to begin with, In order to help you prevent it, keep track of the following:

- how long your headaches last
- how severe the pain is
- the type of pain you feel (i.e.- throbbing, aching, the feeling of a thousand blades of hot iron being thrust viciously into your skull, etc.)
- what you were doing when the pain actually began.

As actual treatment goes, most headaches can be made better with ASA or other pain relievers. however, some people have the tendency to enter into a cycle of daily pill-popping, taking a little interest in the cause of their problem. Bad idea.

There are a number of non-pharmaceutical treatments you can try. Place a cool washcloth on your forehead. Do something relaxing. Take a warm bath. Or try lying still and alternately tightening and relaxing various muscles in your body.

You may wonder about the significance of the diagram of the head that I have included. Well, there is one. I thought it would look neat.

Until next week, I'm Dr. Underground, reminding you to drop off any medical questions you may have in the drop off envelope in front of the newspaper office.

Important. Dr. Underground is not a legal practitionaer of the healing arts. Please consult your own physician for advice.

Mens' Soccer Dominates

by Christine Sidlar
Underground Contributor

After two near-shutouts in the past two weeks, (5-1 over St. Mike's, and 14-1 over Trinity College) the Interfac Mens' Indoor Soccer team encountered the "fiercest" competition they've had so far this season: the Civil Engineering Grads. But they still beat 'em!

The Grads scored the first goal of the game, but due to Scarborough's defence, it took them about 12 minutes to do so. Minutes later Moises Berrios evened the score, followed by a goal by Ed Basiji.. The Grads returned fire with a second goal of their own at this point, but for the rest of the first half, the majority of the play took place in the Grads' end of the field, with Scarborough outshooting them 8-4. Jafar ("The Star") Amin, one of Scarborough's best offensive players, got the worst end of the deal, since the Grads' goalie insisted on repeatedly sliding out of the crease and into Jafar's shins! Both legs in great pain, Jafar used his head to score the final goal of the first half — literally!

The second half of the game showed evidence of some quick thinking and strategy by the Scarborough team. Lucian Costea, also the team's coach, tended to keep gathering the other team's offense into a corner around him, and then passing to our goaltender, Rupinder Ahluwalia, who would then proceed to dispatch the ball to our offense, while the Grads were all still in the corner, leaving their end of the field open. With this kind of teamwork, Scarborough managed to score two goals within about 10 seconds, one each again by Ed and Jaf. Some fancy footwork can be attributed to Pedram Ghasemz, and Ario Bruno Andreas Taleyazdi (he insisted we print his full name!) kept a close watch on whichever offensive player he was shadowing, preventing the Grads from scoring more than once in the second half.

The final score was 5-3 in Scarborough's favour, and the Grads elected Rupinder as the Most Sportsmanlike Player from our team, who received a draw ticket and $100 gift certificate from Contiki and Travel Cuts towards a European vacation, for his efforts.

The boys play again next Tuesday, downtown.

U of T Student Blue over Athletic Budget Cuts

by Jennifer Rosenitsch
Underground Contributer

In early December, coaches, team members and the public learned that the University could no longer afford to support some of the Varsity Blues athletic teams, such as the football, girl's hockey, diving, gymnastics and others. This decision has affected those who are participants in these programmes, the OAC students in secondary schools and will also affect the school spirit of UofT.

In February 1992, those of us who attended MSSB secondary schools, experienced a work-to-rule campaign by our teachers forcing all extra curricular activities to stop. This included all athletic programs, clubs and social events. During this four month ordeal, students at these schools lost interest in their school and in maintaining a positive image at school spirit or involvement. Even though work-to-rule is not the same as the selective athletic cutbacks, the effects the cutbacks can have on the school would be very similar.

Last year, when I applied to this school, UofT representatives told me that I would be able to enjoy university experiences that would include academics, athletics and social activities. With these cutbacks I, as well as other first year students, feel that we are being gypped. Also, OAC students who are now considering their university options have seen these changes in UofT and many no longer want to attend this school, including top athletes.

This whole incident has hit my family hard, not only because I attend this school, but for two other reasons. My father, who was a graduate during the mid-sixties, also played on the Varsity Blues football team and has now seen his alma mater lose an integral part of its existence. But instead of helping his old team, he has to defend another team that my family is a big part of.

My younger sister joined the UofT high performance diving team five years ago when she was twelve. Since then she has been a provincial champion and has placed fifth in the nationals in her age group. Now she is among the top ten in Canada at only 17 years, and has the potential to go to the Olympics and World Championships. There are other members of this team who are performing at the same level as her and have now seen their dreams disappear.

Their coach, Aurelie Gibson, is one of few coaches in Canada who can train athletes who are ready for the international level. University of BC; CAMO, Quebec; and Point Claine, Quebec; are the only other teams who have athletes at this high calibre. All of these teens have been left with but one option- to go out of province, probably to the States. Considering that two members of their team, Bill Hayes and Mark Rourke, went to the Olympics in Barcelona, and Anna Dacyshyn won the Commonwealth Gold in 1990, UofT should reconsider cutting these programs.

This does not only appear to diving, but to all of the other sports. We face not only losing our athletic programs but losing valuable students who bring UofT world wide recognition and pride, to schools outside of Toronto and to the United States.

Our athletes do not only represent UofT but also represent Canada, and to take that away these future Olympians chance to train and strive for the best, is robbing our country of its very best.

Soon we will learn if UofT will reconsider or help these athletes relocate, but as we wait, students face seeing their athletic dreams fade.

Top Ten Reasons why the Bills Lost the SuperBowl

10.) The Dallas Cowboys' Cheerleading squad successfully distracted the Bills.

9.) Unfortunatley, Jim Kelly was injured...too late into the game for the Bills to rebound!

8.) Ahhh, they did it for two years already, why not make it three?

7.) The Buffalo Bills don't know either since they played their best goalie for both innings.

6.) The Bills decided to play "Iron Man" football in an attempt to save money on transportation costs.

5.) Their defence was having an off-day (ie.they sucked!) Coincidentally, their offence sucked as well!

4.) Did we fail to mention that Marv Levy, the coach sucked as well?!

3.) The Buffalo Bills watched "Hoosiers" one too many times, resulting in some minor technical confusion as to which "net" was theirs.

2.) The Buffalo Bills steroid supply ran short right before gametime.

1.) Even the Americans would have been ashamed if the Buffalo Bills had taken the SuperBowl!
